CLEP and TOEFL exams available in Office of Testing Services

JANUARY 18, 2007

The Office of Testing Services at Georgia Southern University is offering the College-Level Examination Program (CLEP) and the Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL).

The CLEP exams provide students of all ages with an opportunity to earn college credit on 34 college-level introductory subjects. Over 2,900 colleges and universities accept CLEP credit.

The CLEP exams are offered every Monday through Friday in the Office of Testing Services.

The TOEFL iBT exam measures the ability of non-native speakers of English to use and understand the language as it is spoken and written in college and university settings.

The TOEFL iBT exam is a computer-based exam. It is offered three times per semester at Georgia Southern, but seating is limited.

For more information, including fees and testing schedules, visit <http://academics.georgiasouthern.edu/testing> or call (912) 681-5415.

Seven technology leaders named to advisory board for Georgia Southern's CIT

JANUARY 18, 2007

The College of Information Technology (CIT) at Georgia Southern University has tapped seven technology leaders from across the state to join its Board of Advisors.

The incoming members, named to three-year appointments, are:

- Richard Aldredge, vice president of information systems for Kauffman Tire, in Ellenwood.
- Alyssa Belcher, network administrator for Dabbs, Hickman, Hill & Cannon in Statesboro.
- Angela Bland, director of client services for Staffing Technologies in Atlanta.
- Jo Anne Knieriem, a consultant with MacBeth Williams Teleconsulting in Canton.
- Michael Polak, director of product management for VeriSign Inc. in Savannah.
- Chuck Stallworth, president of Holloway Consulting Group in Atlanta.
- Cindy Tierney, chief information officer for Beazer Homes USA in Atlanta.

'We are excited to welcome these technology leaders to our board," said CIT Dean James Bradford. 'As one of the few dedicated Colleges of Information Technology in the country, we are committed to providing a premier educational experience for our students. These new board members will provide valuable real-world perspective and will guide and support us as we continue to develop new programs to meet the changing needs of the technology industry."

Established in 2003, Georgia Southern's CIT consists of three academic departments: Computer Sciences, Information Systems and Information Technology. The college is housed in a $33 million state-of-the-art facility featuring 25 interactive learning/study rooms, 10 computer labs and 14 electronic classrooms. Students have the opportunity to work on real-world projects through the college's own software company Eagle Informatics. Its client list includes regional and national companies such as NCR.
